Welcome to module 4 (38% complete)

Welcome back!
I'm Emily, and I've been working in security education at Google for nearly nine years.
My team works closely with our remarkable security experts to craft innovative and engaging educational solutions for our workforce to keep security at the forefront.
I'll be your instructor for the remainder of the course to discuss important career-related topics, such as how to engage with the security community, find jobs in the security field, create a resume, and navigate the interview process.
We're approaching the end of the certificate program, what an incredible journey it's been so far.
We've discussed a lot up to this point, including incident detection and escalation, and the roles that stakeholders play in protecting an organization.
We've also explored the sensitive nature of the communications we share and strategies for conveying critical information to stakeholders.
But does the learning stop now that we're approaching the end of the program?
Absolutely not!
In the following videos, we'll identify reliable security resources you can use to stay up-to-date on security news and trends.
Then, we'll share some ways to become involved with the security community.
We'll end with a discussion about how to establish and advance a career in security.
Coming up, we'll highlight some great resources to help you stay current on what's happening in the security industry.
