Preface

HI! im the owner of this site, I'm going to drop things that aren't related my my game idea here!

the dream, a western

I reckon I dozed off for a good two hours and found myself in the wildest dream, somethin' I'd never seen before. It was a world overrun with the undead, every corner crammed with unspeakable horrors. I was aboard a peculiar contraption, part train, part some otherworldly flyin' machine. My duty was to roam after each stop, checkin' for zombies that might've hitched a ride.

Winter had tightened its grip, makin' the sight of zombies scarce, but there were fresh faces on board – an old-timer and his sprightly daughter, rumored to be gun-runners. They claimed a spot on the top deck, settin' up shop. Now, before they could hawk their goods, I had the job of inspectin' their place to see if they were latent zombies. Fortuitously, they weren't.

You see, I was the Zombie Wrangler, given the title after I'd survived a horde attack all by myself, armed with nothin' more than a busted shootin' iron and my wits. Now, my gun had failed me again, leavin' me with a small tomahawk, a machete, and a clever gizmo strapped to my wrist – a razor-sharp blade that sprung out at a flick of my hand. Had it made special, just for me. Saved my hide more times than I could count.

My belly was rumblin', and the only grub I had was whipped up by none other than the legendary George Washington – who, in this dream, turned out to be my own mama. She was famed for her curious mixtures, and the most enigmatic of all was this orange-red paste, a guarded recipe whispered to be laced with her own blood.

I searched every hidden crevice and shadowy corner, vigilantly watchin' for any trace of the undead..There was a pair of 'em, but they wasn't the shopkeepers.. I found their little shop on the top deck, and as I entered, they drew some fancy-lookin' pistols, nearly sendin' me to meet my maker.

After a tense moment, I introduced myself as the protector of this vessel and asked if they had any firepower to trade. They produced a proper gun and some cartridges, but they wanted more in return. That's when I pulled out a sack filled with mama's special paste. I was famished and had a few cuts and bruises, so I dug in, offering them a taste. I proposed a deal: George Washington's blood, a fabled concoction said to feed a man and shield him from the undead.

After some haggling, they agreed. They offered to clean and hone my blades, throw in a few boxes of cartridges, and even shared their fears. They'd heard eerie moans and bone-crunchin' thuds against the vessel walls, so they'd holed up in their weapon-filled sanctuary.

I promised to clear out the undead I'd encountered and to secure the next deck. As I left the shopkeepers, I gave them reassurances that a clean-up crew would be along in less than an hour. They seemed relieved, and I felt a renewed sense of purpose. This was my vessel to protect, and I had a job to do.

How to use this site.

- The Shelves button has the page with all the books presorted by category.
- The Books button brings you to the page with all the books
- the search bar will search the whole site for things pertaining to your quiry
- im not sure how to enable search bar in mobile mode.
- when you want to go to the next or previous page of a book, scroll to the bottom of the page and click next page.
- longer chapters or books have a chapter list on the side. with wider screens
- in mobile mode click info to see info about a book or chapter selection. and it has quick links to parts of the page :D
- maybe one day ill figure out how to add the swap to light mode or dark mode at will button or default dark mode. with what ive tinkered with the button appears to rely on cookies and default is still light mode after cookies expire

(im sorry default is light mode, there is a dark mode button for mobile users in the info tab)
i tried to make it work QwQ
